Just try to make me get off YouTube.

I've been fairly ambivalent about Disney's determination to re-make every sacred film from my childhood into something that vaguely resembles "live action". Why tamper with perfection? I've asked absolutely nobody, as I've watched trailers for The Jungle Book, Beauty and the Beast and Aladdin. The Lion King, however, was my absolute, complete obsession, from the years 1997 until – well, probably until I was old enough to have other interests but was still collecting Simba toys from the Disney Store. My interest was piqued, however, when I found out the cast of the new film – Donald Glover, Seth Rogen, Billy Eichner, Keenan-Michael Key, BEYONCÉ as NALA – but really, nothing has raised my excitement levels like the new video for Beyoncé's song from the film, Spirit.

After this comes a white beaded gown by Alexandrine, which sort of makes Beyoncé look like she's part of a tree (she's literally Mother Nature) and then there's a very quick glimpse of what looks like a white satin blazer with long, white fringing.
